a great poultry show in this city next winter, when the birds are in plumage.

A well-known gentieman, a hational authority on poultry, said Saturday that this was evidently the finest point in the country to give a poultry exhibition, for the display at the State fairs, though scarcely a leading feature, have grown beyond the ability of the Association to provide for them. He thought the success of the plan mentioned was assured if properly presented to the poultry men.

The idea is to have a competent person with a reputation all over the country for ability and fairness to score the birds, and award prizes on their merits. No iargent collection than that seen here last week would make a novel and attractive exhibition of itself, if arranged in a large building where the fowls could be conveniently inspected by visitors.

The idea is a good one, and should be energetically pushed.
